CLASS STRUGGLE

COMMUN-ISTS IN TRADE UNIONS

PORTUGAL

THE

LESSONS

B.TRENCH, THE HIGH COURT AND THE SWM MILITANT'S CHAUVINISM

commentary

THE LEFT & THE FIGHT AGAINST REPRESSION

THE LIMITS OF OPPORTUNISM

1. THE LEFT AND THE MURRAYS
2. THE FIGHT FOR POLITICAL STATUS

COMMUN-COMMINSTRATED AND THE COMMINSTRATED A

MINITER PREPARED OF THE PREPARED OF THE STATE OF THE PREPARED OF THE PREPARED

16memme D

THE LEFT WITE FIGHT AGAINSE REPRESSION

WE LINETS OF CHARMISM

1. FOR COST AND THE MUMBERLYS.
HILL FIG C HOLL PRINTERS.

q0S

BMAdam

FROM THE HUNGER STRIKE TO THE GENERAL ELECTION PLANT & TOTAL OF THE BOOK SHOWS

three aims - to show solidarity with so Dublin's General Post Office on language the hunger strikers, to protest at lagra April 16 in solidarity with Provis-Garda brutality and to oppose the ional Republican hunger strikers special restrictions in the prison. raises questions the left must The stress on the vague idea of sol- answer; that is, those of the left idarity rather on the demand for was ill who were there only to be shown up their release and the release of all at their weakest both in the raggedpolitical prisoners was to be repeated in the weeks ahead.

The viclent prevention of the deme. leaflets. are noting leading the leaflets are noting to the dement on stration's attempt to assemble at our properties of the dement o the prison by masses of riot-equipped The meeting was hijacked by the Gardai posed in the sharpest way the Provos through the 'Irish Civil question of how to enforce and defend the right to demonstrate. The Provos' them abjectly. A benumbed crowd politics were no match for the problem was subjected to an interminable lems posed. They failed to equip queue of republican speakers sermonsquads in the front and flanks with batons and clubs though they knew there would be a push from the more of the prisoners and demanding militant and steeled youth and bourgeois "ordinary justice" for Northern participants to try to them. They also called for token smash through the cordons and assert and immediate industrial stoppages, the right to assemble at the agreed without any preparation, which place. Given the inability of the Provo leadership and their conspirat- ed to disruptiolog add asw ti vi solderi orial politics to give the push some The Hunger Strike protest was direction it turned into an unco-ord- defused by the Provos in three inated stoning. And given the moves. They cancelled the demo called for Portlaoise for the 17th Provo and Gardai, the Provos by the Belfast Relatives Action claimed that the demo was not a Committee and put ICRA at the head defeat but a victory because they of the lot in Dublin on the 16th.

brutally, physically prevented from national scale into the demo which assembling at the prison and the medical they had diverted to Dublin. They State forces were able to ascertain made speeches denying any confrontthat the Provos were incapable of raising the question of defence of the control demonstrations. Thus Garda batons trumping up the idea of confron-

The Provo leadership, unable to elementary demands. face the need for defence had no option but to defuse the situation for marxists on the platform who swim April 16th. Its own refusal to engage in joint action and United principle to say what they stood front work meant that no other polchance to pose the issue before the masses of protestors, which is precisely why they refuse to participate in any significant joint action.

G.P.O. - APRIL 16

North, not since 1972 The demo at Portlaoise jail had offers The 5000-strong demonstration at blind assithat passes for a programme in case s were able to assemble elsewhere. They refused to mobilise and con-The facts are, however that it was centrate all their forces on a crushed the right to assemble. stand on the hunger strikers and on the hunger strikers and on the hunger strikers and on the hunger strikers are stand on the hunger strikers. tation to excuse their not-an-inch!

> the demands of the group he was representing - the Galway Civil moission Liberties Action Committee, Tolon Vew

> Irish Workers Group members took part in the march carrying slogans for the release of the prisoners

VITHE HUNGER STRIKE

sons and torture under rank and file ding anti-imperialists as such control, for the abolition of the Special Criminal Court and for the building of a united front against of cratic mass campaign been possible

We marched in support of anti-asg tsd class. imperialist political prisoners, atellasI ment plead for humanitarian con-cern from a State that has never against repression. They have at al agents of bourgeois 'humanitar- propaganda. The moralism of their ianism', the bishops, who brought politics is at its most dangerous the hunger strike to an end by when they maintain that winning any worker or republican moved by that he or she is a political humanitarian concern or reformist victim of British imperialism. ideals to stop torture and repres- Their deep-rooted nationalism sion, but we do not ever argue the compromises their hostility to the as the basis for action. The time Southern State, and so they will has passed now when even that soft not campaign resolutely against it appeal would win a response. If that despite recent claims of such a is not the case why then were the new turn, and despite its use of police and not the demonstrators every possible means to smash them. in Croke Park the day after the GPO and As socialists, therefore, we can maeting?

the anti-imperialist struggle, South- struggle but only in a united front ern workers would tolerate even in which we can advocate revolutionmore repression of republicans be- ary socialist methods and perspectcause the struggle is portrayed to - 10 ives. them as depraved murder bearing no relation to their interests and in angel no way under their control. To A self-red ld Republicans and socialists have never built a campaign in the South which clearly expressed the political nature of repression and which for a trade union inquiry into pri- propagandised the necessity of defenfrom the Southern State. And in the North, not since 1972 has a demorepression. asillo face learned a nild because of the disastrous bombing We did not march because of human- campaign which has reduced antiitarian concern for the prisoners, unionists to passive pawns of SDLP much as we admire their heroism. much as we admire their heroism. and the Peace Movement. Only in the We did not march because of our context of a mass movement can concern to have the state respect military tactics be effective. Both the "sacredness" of human life, and we did not march as a gesture.

military tactics be effective. Both worth and South the bankruptcy of the Provisionals' politics has playwe did not march as a gesture. We did not the hands of the ruling wention of the The petty-bourgeois nature of the members of an organisation which has never baulked at the use of the second state of the second seco violence in furthering the struggle. about defending political status of about defending political status of ing why they are not really serious The mealy-mouthed catholic nation- prisoners. The April demonstrations alist rhetoric of the Provos on that Saturday was utter hypocrisy and signified political hollowness.

How can a revolutionary armed move— they can control them, in the fight been shy of killing and interning anti-imperialists. This cannot be the basis for a serious campaign against repression.

Ironically it was the professional agents of bourgeois 'humanitarappealing to this same false political status from the state is consciousness. Revitated tasiled out vnot ultimately important as long as Of course we will fight alongside the prisoner is privately convinced abused victionel never trail behind the Provos or their fronts. We will work with Not having a class perspective on them in the anti-imperialist itically organized groups had change to pose the issue bafore the masses of protectors, which is precisely why they refuse to partic-

LOYALIST "STRIKE"

Unlike the SWM, we did not for one minute believe that the Loyal-ist "strike" had to be opposed simply "because its aims and objectives are sectarian". Nor did we look to "the Protestant working class themselves" as "the only way this strike can be broken completely".

This economism led SWM logically to believe that the unions could "protect" back to work marches and finally to conclude that "if the Loyalist thugs can be isolated and defeated by Protestants, prospects bo can open up towards overcoming sectarianism through militant working class unity". If only there were grounds for such pious hopes! In essence SWM have never taken seriously their own statements about the Northern State as the bedrock of unionism and sectarianism in the working class. If the extreme loyalists could be put down, SWM believe, it would be easier to propagandise for socialism among Protestants. More than a shade of Militant here! Certainly, where it is ever possible the unionist working class must be propagandised with socialist ideas, but not in order to create new obstacles of economism and reformism.

In Derry an IWG bulletin was distributed on the eve of the "strike" stressing the essential issues. The strike highlighted the weakness of the anti-imperialist struggle and the growth of repression North and South which has emboldened the Loyalists to go for more - with some results. The bulletin urged:

"we must be absolutely clear that any resistance to a loyalist "strike" must be on the grounds that it is loyalism, the Northern State and British Imperialism that remain to be smashed. So far the struggle against these has been inadequate the result of using military action as a strategy rather than as tactics and leading to the loss of mass political involvement on the streets both North and South. In any resistance to loyalism we must begin to rebuild that mass political support within the anti-unionist working class as the foundation for the ultimate involvement of the Irish working class North and South. Only this perspective can prepare the basis for a successful armed assault upon the Northern State and Imperialism. - "Smash the Loyalist Strike". "Build the United Front of Workers/Socialists/Republicans."

"In the event of anti-unionist workers attempting to march to work we must call upon the Trade Union movement, the Derry Trades Council to give a lead on the march. But we must have no faith in such 'leaders'. Their record of sit-on-the-fence respectability, their refusal to act over past discrimination, internment and Army terror - the 'fruits' of imperialism - is only the other side of the coin to refusing to fight unemployment, low wages, bad housing, emigration - the fruits of capitalism -

"We must refuse to accept any pleas from Trade Union leaders or anyone else to make any march "non-political" on the excuse that 'it will get more support'. This is a recipe for turning the fights against loyalism and its state a political fight - into a simple economic struggle. It is not on! Furthermore, any attempt to accept 'protection' from the B.A. against Loyalist thugs must be completely rejected. Rather than do so we should refuse to march. Our enemy is above all those who have spawned loyalism and its states, North and South. Therefore we demand

Therefore we demand
"British Troops Out"
as a focus of resistance to loyalism. We must put ourselves firmly on the side of those directly fighting British Imperialism and immediately suffering from its repression - republicans. We must call for the retention of "Political Status for Republicans" as a clear sign that whatever criticisms and differences exist on politics, integr and tactics we will not permit Imperialism to turn republican fighters into criminals..."

rolicies.

eat GENERAL ELECTIONS mittly ent not

NO JOY FOR THE WORKING CLASS

Whatever pleasure we may feel at the massive defeat suffered by the Coalition government of Cosgrave, O'Brien and Cooney, the return of the Southern State's other major capitalist pacture of the southern sou

On the day after the elections shares in the Dublin Stock Exchange in the property and construction business rose by £8million. Clearly someone expects to benefit, but it won't be workers. For, Fianna Fail are just as determined to continue with policies which will protect and further th interests of native capitalism and are just as equally determined to stamp out anyone who threatens in any way the existing social, economic or political order. There will be no end to the pro-imperialist, collaborationary role of a party which was the first to begin systematically arresting republicans and attacking democratic rights of protest.

PROTEST VOTE: STORY TESTORY

It is obvious that large sections of Irish workers turned against the coalition because they had had enough of its blatant cynical disregard for the effects of policies which saw unemployment and inflation increase, women's rights to contraception and equal pay ignored totally and living standards drop sharply.

A Labour Party that presides over policies like these, and at the same time endorses the build up of the state's repressive apparatus, the violation of democratic rights, the torture of political prisoners, doesn't deserve support for four minutes, never mind four years.

For thousands, their vote for Fi anna Fail registered a protest against the coalition. It in no way can be seen as simple-minded faith in Lynch's party and policies.

They voted for him because, after four years of weathering the most systematic attacks on them since the fifties no coherent resistance or alternative energed from those organisations claiming to represent the true interests of working class people and the oppressed generally people and the oppressed generally the trade unions, the left in the Labour Party, the republican movement or the revolutionary left.

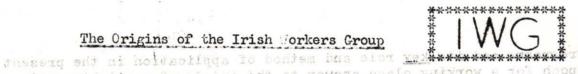

Either these organisations tamely contented themselves with abstract calls for the coalition or the Labour Party on its own to nationalise more resources, or simply relied -upon more sectional militancy in wage struggles as the way forward for a divided and demoralised class. What these perspectives clearly lack is the recognition that a weakened and divided class is in need of political answers for the immediate struggles on wages, jobs and prices, women's rights, repression, which not only concretely lay the basis for uniting the strong and the weak in the working class, urban and rural workers, employed and unemployed, male and female, young and old, but also in doing so raise in struggle the clear need to go beyond the reformist and nationalist illusions in the capitalist sconomy and its state.

The I. W.G. believe that among large sections of workers in the South there exists a clear perception of the need for socialist and class unity. But the question must be what kind of unity - on what programme and strategy the left can regroup. For us it must involve hammering out a set of demands which in uniting different " sections of our class will not only provide defence now against capitalist attacks upon us, but will at the same time offer the perspective of a class-wide offensive upon capitalist rule as a whole. Without such a perspective the Irish wording class will go on voting for its class enemy and revolutionaries will remain irrelevant. [soitiled streets both north and South. In begin to rebuild that mass politteal support within the anti-unionst working class as the foundation

The Origins of the Irish Workers Group

epoch for a working class answer to the cri The Irish Jorkers Group originated as a left opposition within the Socialist orkers liovement in 1975 The immediate issues around which the left opposition crystallised were:

time maintaining a high priority of theoretics work for all members and contacts. The group deriver in include and principled in include the group derivers in include the straight and restrained to the straight and the stra and principled polemical debate with the left in memory. (ii)

On both these questions the S. . . held positions which effectively reduced (1) the national question to a suberdinate role in the programme and strategy for the Irish Working Class socialist revolution; (b) the emancipation of women from both exploitation and oppression to a side issue better left to pressure groups and liberals. [smeldangetal tend to thencomes

The left opposition group differed fundamentally on these issues. With regard to the North we argued for the centrality of the national question and for systematic propaganda, agitation and intervention, in particular the building of the United Fronts within the anti-unionist population. In this context we saw and still see the importance of raising particular demands on the S.D.L.P. as a means of drawing larger sections of anti-unionist workers into the struggle and breaking the hold of the S.D.L.P.

With regard to the women question, the left opposition not only won the membership of the S. ... to see the strategic necessity of the demands for contraception and abortion on demand but fought for them to be taken up within the Irish working class - as an aspect of this we called for the building of a mass working class women's movement as a strategic imperative for the group and for the class.

The S. leadership resisted tooth and nail our attempts. In reply to the numerous documents written by the left for internal discussion the S. ... leadership never once answered in writing and they resorted to a campaign of slander and lies, appealing in the process to the crude workerism of man of the politically more backward members of the S.W.M.

The left group contined to analyse the continuing failure of the S.M.H. to grow in conditions most suitable to testing the revolutionary programme. We concluded that the S. ... 's complete misconception of how to build a revolutionary movement stemmed from their wholly inadequate conception of revolutionary Marxism, its principles and traditions.

In particular their inability to see the crucial need for the group to begin the process of developing the basis for a fully worked out, concrete programme, applying the method developed first by Marx and Engels and culminating finally in the works and experience of Lenin and Trotsky in the 3rd and 4th International. Without a programmatic basis, rooted as a principle in an analysis of the world economy and locating the particular features of Ireland under capitalism and imperialism as one part of that international world market, no lasting concrete strategy for workers power can ever emerge. In the last seven years no 'marxist' group in Ireland has ever been able to withstand the strong currents of republicanism, reformism and opportunism which sweep around the Irish working class. All remain insignificant commentators representing ideologically fliffering degrees of centrism either capitulating, like the B. ... to economism and to workerism or like the P.D., M.S.R., I.R.S.P., I.S.P., R.R.P. to republicanism.

The Irish Workers Group produced last November the first draft of our Manifesto. In this we tried to re-establish some of the fundamentals the A.B.C. of Revolutionary Marxism - including internationalism, democratic centralism, reformism, the party, etc. Since that document's limited circulation we havefurther developed its conception of the nature of the Transitional Programme and its key role and method of application in the present epoch for a working class answer to the crisis of capitalism and Imperialism. Although still a small group with branches in Derry, Galway and Dublin and individuals elsewhere, we have begun to intervene practically in the struggles of the class, at the same time maintaining a high priority of theoretical and educational work for all members and contacts. The group believes in serious and principled polemical debate with the left in Ireland and Internationally as part of the process necessary for the creation of a principled programmatic regroupment here and elsewhere of the best elements of a new International.

The building of a new party in Ireland must be seen as a national component of that International. Only such a perspective can guarantee the revolutionary basis for the end of the blood-soaked rule of capitalism for ever. To it we pledge ourselves.

consistion. In this called we see and still so the importance of reising a reference of religions of decimal target sections of weather demands and the tile to the service of the bold of the c.D.F.F.

Comic necessity of the desends

Cought for them to be taken and meil our sticapts. In reply continuing failure of the S. .i.

n blind of and to notice ones

San of sand bas war yd to ne of Lenin and Protein in o ramatic bests, rocted as traff to or q and an mailmind ne area of republicanism, the latest selection of the mifesto. In this of tried to re-establish some of the fundaments the this tried of evolution of marking intersetionalism, described controlism, referrist, the party, atc. Since that decommands hindted elecutation we havefurther breakened ins conception of the majorn of the Tensitional

ete stretegy for coders power

the ... to docuorism and iting and they reserved to a

. . . cond To agod

the arborable of the S. Wo see the st

The Manifesto of the Irish Workers Group will be published at the end of August.

For the present, CLASS STRUGGLE will be published quarterly or every two months at most. Local bulletins will supplement
it in each area.

Correspondence with IWG is best conducted via a member directly but letters may be sent to Matt Docherty, c/o 90 Upper Dorset Street, Dublin 1.

remain insignificate car entities representa

The Trial Petitins (trop produced that levenber the first draft of our

THE FAR LEFT AL

MURRAYS - THE LIMITS OF OPPORTUNISM 1.

The issue on which repression by the Southern State has focussed most sharply in the recent past has been the decision to hang the Murrays by the Special Criminal Court. Coming after a full spate of the most repressive measures, and culminating in the declaration of a state of emergency, the issue provided the 'revolutionary' left in Ireland with another searching test of programme and strategy. Without exception, each grouping from the motley assortment of centrists and left republicans displayed the most shameful capitulation to reformism and liberalism in their gaderene rush to get an audience.

The possiblity which the issue raised of creating a small but a smooth principled nucleus of workers, socialists and republicans against repression, firmly grounded in a theory and practice politically and and independent from all liberal, action al reformist and republican solutions was squandered. As the whole question of constructing anew the basis of a genuine international revol-d eno utionary socialist programme is very raised by this issue, this article yew will examine in detail the positions taken up by the left. shal as anivad yo

SWM, RRP and IRSP intervened on the Murray issue on the 'unity' prog-

MDC were: noituloser a beigge you is erly or humanely? as inemuals

- 1. Reprieve the Murrays and insigno
- 2. End Capital Punishment. woll and Jas
- 3. Trial by Jury.

We shall examine these one by one.

THE REPRIEVE DEMAND

The Murrays were arrested, tried and convicted under the Special Criminal Court, a court set up by the Southern capitalist class and their state as part of its role in helping to destroy the armed resistance of the Provos and the threat posed by them and by the continued resistance of the Northern minority to loyalism and British imperialism - a threat to the stability of the Southern state.

The Murrays' action cannot be a stall divorced from their context. Though we do not as revolutionary marxists agree with their brand of politics or their method (in essence a formally of individual terrorism), we fully recognise them as political prisoners of the southern capitalist class, allies of British imperial-

Under no circumstances can revolutionary socialists recognise the right of that class and its state under whatever form to judge the Murrays. Only the Irish working class can eventually judge them. Therefore the only correct demand in respect of their imprisonment and sentence should have been Free the Murrays. and ted Sytting ment

The demand of the MDC essentially recognised the right of the Irish capitalist class to arrest, try The 'far left' groups - PD, MSR, and convict them, even though some not, privately, recognise this right. The position was one of quibbling ramme of the Murray Defence Commit- about the 'decency' or 'fairness' tee (MDC). This included taking or 'justice' of hanging them. Thus officer positions on the committee the authority and legitimacy of a and therefore implied full support bourgeois court and the bourgeois for the main demands of the MDC. state is strengthened by a campaign The four central demands of the show how it should operate prop-

The Irish Workers' Group believes shulent of normine tal principles of revolutionary marxism which must be based on a this was treachery to the fundamen-4. For an independent Enquiry. strategy which at all times is absolutely politically independent from any illusions in the bourgeois state machinery - courts, law, police or parliament etc.

The naked liberalism and reformism of the central demand of the MDC leads to the mistakes of the next one.

RE-TRIAL BY JURY

Not just a jury trial, but even more detailed - "that fresh scientific evidence not hitherto offered in Irish courts be admitted"!

Here it is explicitly presented that a bourgeois court with a jury represents a superior form of 'justice' for those fighting British imperialism and Irish capitalism. Here our lefts trail behind every liberal bourgeois in press, pulpit and parliament peddling such muck to a working class which has not got, will not and can never under capitalism expect justice.

Jury trials are class justice, no more acceptable to us as a tribunal of judgement for anti-imperialist fighters than the Special Criminal Court. Furthermore, the logic of this demand leads to the situation where a jury decision, even one to free the Murrays, would have the effect of strengthening ruling class ideas about the 'neutrality' of bourgeois justice. What do we demand if a jury trial, even with the admission of new evidence, finds them guilty? Let the centrists of the MDC answer that!

Having effectively defended the institutions they ever so loudly proclaim they want to destroy, the MDC's next demand - Abolish Capital Punishment - is revealed as a moralistic and hymanitarian gesture of liberals more concerned with making Irish society more "civilised", less barbaric, "as befits a member of the European community".

Instead of seeing the existence of capital punishment as one of the most horrific weapons the Irish ruling class has used and will use again against those who threaten in any way their interests; instead of explaining how such complicity strengthens the chains that ideologically bind workers to those who exploit them; instead of these class arguments the MDC were forced to ignore the whole context of state repression in which the Murray case was only the latest and most urgent example, namely the anti-imperialist struggle.

The failure to include in the MDC platform the abolition of the Special Criminal Court proves this point to the hilt. The Murrays were tried byit, tortured under it, and so were hundreds of others before and since. Yet the MDC, for fear of losing the involvement of their 'liberal' supporters (whoever they may be) spinelessly decided not to campaign on this because of its clear identification with the repression of republicans and the struggle in the North. Thus while opposing the death penalty, these "socialists" preferred to reform rather than oppose the institution which was the immediate agent of that penalty. Yet these people claim in other places, and on other platforms to be fighting repression! Some fight.

FOR AN INDEPENDENT INQUIRY ...

This is the perfect capstone for this muddle of bleating liberals. An "independent" enquiry, as they all know, is utterly impossible in a society of class division. Having of course put all your eggs into one basket of bourgeois justice - reprieve and retrial - what better way to prove that capitalist institutions are indeed 'neutral' than by having an independent ie non-class enquiry?

THE CAMPAIGN

'Armed' with its rosary of liberal demands, the MDC further capitulated by refusing to orientate its whole effort to the working class movement - factories, trade union branches, Labour Party branches, tenants associations (whose national body carried a resolution against capital punishment) - as well as to students. This was not an accident but flows consistently from the decision to include the above Isian basically liberal (instead of working-class) demands. They were meant to get an audience and support on the lowest political level possible. In other words they decided to trim their sails to what they knew would be a fierce wind of working-class hostility, well demonstrated by the withdrawal of access to a trade-union meeting place.

At the G.P.O. rally, October 30th, Eamonn Mc Cann summed up this opportunism so well when he stated that as it was impossible to get the support of the labour movement, 'fight! would have to rest with those assembled there. For the centrists of the MDC the all-important thing was to get an audience even if this meant dropping all the fundamentals of marxism, justified by the excuse that the important thing was to "save the Murrays". Why not? After all, it is possible to make speeches about the need for socialism and socialist politics on other occasions and platforms!

What is clearly absent in the far left is any method by which the issue of the Murrays could be connected by a series of demands to the very centre of the general question of state repression. The need for a set of such demands was crucial for the beginning of a fight explicitly directed to the working class. The IWG believes the demands should have been from the beginning:

- 1. Free the Murrays.
 - 2. Abolish the Special Criminal Court.
 - 3. Abolish Capital Punishment.
 - 4. For a Trade Union and Labour

 Movement Enquiry under rank and file inspection and control.

ABOLISHING CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

These demands clearly illustrate why we as socialists are opposed to the hanging of the Murrays - because the hangman is the capitalist State which is using every anti-democratic measure, including torture, to get convictions against anyone it chooses to pick up; that it is in the interests of the working class that these class measures be resisted. Therefore the working class must investigate publicly the whole set of circumstances arising out of the arrest, detention and convictions of the Murrays.

Our centrists are right when they point out that the working class would not respond with roses to our demands. But what does that prove? Surely that the campaign against repression in the South, that the whole question of internment and the British Army in the North should have been at the forefront of revolutionary activity in the working class years ago.

Instead the revolutionary left, like the cowardly and centrist SWM preferred to believe that the question of repression "wasn't posed sharply enough in the South" in 1974; that only when one had built up working class support on wages and related questions could one expect any support for wider issues. This despicable economism has effectively wrecked the SWM. But nothing has been learned! This is clear from the MDC and subsequent developments.

The absence of a clear campaign has left the Irish working class defenceless against the poison of propaganda from the sewers of the bourgeois media. And yet, if a small but determined campaign had begun, whatever the setbacks and difficulties, events have since shown so clearly how it could have been the basis for a widening campaign involving workers' groups.

LOST CHANCES

Have not workers struck over repression and emergency legislation? Have not the decisions by the courts to free men tortured by the Gardai provided excellent material for such a campaign in the working class movement. Would not the revelations by the Irish Times — it was left to this hypocritical bourgeois paper to 'champion' democracy — would they not have provided even more damning evidence had the left built the core of a campaign around a clear line long ago.

All of these opportunities were wasted by the treacherous policies of the left in Ireland. Now they bleat about working class hostility and apathy. On the contrary, we say, it is your hostility to revolutionary politics, your inability to learn the lessons of your centrism that is the obstacle to building a campaign.

For six years the revolutionary left in Ireland, in one form or another, have stood on the sideline of the struggles being fought. No marx- A QUICK CHANGE OF HATS ist organisation has counted as an alternative to any of the petty bourgeois and reformist solutions being offered North or South. In the face of the demoralisation and apathy within a working class utterly incapable on its own of generating class-wide solutions, the far left have shown only the bankruptcy of their programmes and strategies. The splits and fracturing on the left are the clearest sign that new solutions, new strategies and new ideas are necessary.

In some respects the fragments represented by the PD, MSR, SWM, ISP, IRSP and RRP recognise this, but in a wholly inadecuate way. The Murray Committee proves this conclusively. Here, left unity on a liberal platform revealed just how far the degeneration has gone. But this opportunist capitulation in the name of broad unity is only one side of the left's centrism. does out reveledy auged

SECTARIANISM

The other side is, of course, sectarianism. During the Labour Party conference in Limerick the MDC organised a picket at the hall. Instead of seeing that conference as a focus for a mass rally relating from outside to the sections of the labour movement inside who were concerned about the Murrays, the picket was a pathetic demonstration of the MDC's weakness.

Firstly, the left who claimed so loudly that it was so important to "save the Murrays" didn't turn out their organisations as a priority. Instead one or two members from the Limerick area and Dublin fitfully supported the picket. What is worse, instead of fully supporting the demonstration, weak as it was, the MSR, SWM, PD, IRSP and Provos saw fit to stand aside and sell their papers even during the short period of the picket and only to join it for a token presence. deni quoy continoq

The IWG while opposed to the demand for a reprieve, joined the picket with our demands and remained on it. medata0

The sectarianism of the left was further revealed at a meeting of the local Anti-Repression Committee in Limerick the previous night. There the IWG asked three questions of the SWM and PD speakers.

- 1. Why no mention of the Murrays by them at the meeting? To alatha
- 2. Why the separation of the MDC from the question of repression?
- 3. How could they say that the demands of the Murray Committee didn't effectively support bourgeois legality and institutions?

Our questions were attacked as sectarian disruption! It seemed that Trench (SWM) and Farrell (PD) were wearing their anti-repression hats that night - not their MDC ones.

To the third question SWM revealed just how cynical they really were about the Murray Committee, revolutionary principle and the class struggle. Trench admitted that 'Free the Murrays' was the correct demand and that they disagreed with the notion of an "independent" enquiry. So! One of the member groups of the MDC feels that it is permissible to join a committee whose demands it disagrees with (except 'abolish capital punishment' - very revolutionary!), and then claim that it is interested in united action.

This shameless cynicism should have had the SWM immediately removed from any organisation worth talking about. Not so the MDC. Naturally, then, the SWM gave only token space to the campaign in its paper. (In fact, SWM, in issue 38 of the WORKER, urged readers to collect signatures "in support of the aims of the Murray Defence Committee"!) Furthermore, they never argued in their paper why the MDC's demands were inadequate. So much for their seriousness about the 'real world'.

HIGH COURT & SWIM

Farrell, more honestly, said the demands for reprieve and re-trial were necessary steps to the other demands. Thus, the PD leader, like the Bourbons, has learnt nothing and forgotten everything in six years. The PD's involvement in the Northern Ireland Civil Rights Association has taught them nothing about how to fight reformism and develop a revolutionary socialist method. As the MDC so starkly underlines, those who will not learn from history are doomed to repeat it.

The Murrays were eventually "saved" Noel being 'reprieved' and Marie getting a re-trial in the Special Criminal Court. and latest has being

In the new year, fortified by the freeing of Stenson, the third of the accused, after savage treatment, the MDC claimed to fight for the release of the Murrays. But under the inspiration of members who opposed this demand (the RS group) it merely trailed in the wake of the Irish Times expose, organising under the slogan of "From Torture to the Gallows'. In this deepening confusion the MSR abstained on an IWG motion to have the posters carry the slogan "Free the Murrays". "We don't see this as a matter of high revolutionary principle", they said. and itsemp and wellow out rewome

Whether the partial reprieve of the Murrays was a result of the MDC campaign - and that is what the RRP, MSR etc. believe - is hardly the point. (IWG tend to believe it had much more to do with the division in the bourgeoisie themselves and the ambiguous nature of the legislation under which they were found guilty of 'capital murder'.) What mattered was the response to the new situation by the Murray Committee. Stenson's release was ar excuse for adopting the demand for release prior to Marie Murray's re-trial, but still bogged down in opportunist method they still sought broad 'liberal' audiences around slogans about torture which were confusing.

The new revelations about torture were very important. But they had to be related to with clear demands which bring the political question into focus. The climate created by the exposures was all the more rear son for demanding clearly the aboiition of the Special Criminal Court, a labour-movement enquiry to include the ever increasing incidence of beatings and torture incustody, and, centrally while Marie Murray's life was still in the balance, "Free the Murrays".

TOWARDS A MARXIST PROGRAMME

The issue of the Murrays is no longer posed in such a way that workers can be mobilised in demonstrations about them in particular. Locked away for life in the punishment cells of capitalism and imperialism they can only be defended as two among hundreds of political prisoners.

The tragedy is that despite the heroism and self-sacrifice of its members the MDC has contributed nothing to the building of a working class anti-repression movement, nor has it represented any gain for specifically revolutionary ideas as distinct from liberal bleats.

The opportunists of the far left have shifted their ploughs to other patches. One would be hard put to find in their papers even a retrospective mention of the Murrays.

The IWG believes that only if the mistakes of the past and the present are debated frankly and openly, and the necessary lessons taken, can the foundations for serious and consistent policies and intervention be achieved.

Only in this way can the nucleus of a genuine marxist party emerge.

xiedt bas sugbri set bevoltim gaw yl

flunkeys y repeating the whole load of idenlo, ical poison about the end of the engineer p.11

B. TRENCH, HIGH COURT & SWM

On Thursday Feb. 17, 1977 the High Court in Dublin imposed a fine of £150 plus costs on the fortnightly radical journal 'Hibernia' for what the President of the Court described as 'contempt' of court. The contempt in this case constituted the printing in Hibernia of two letters which implied that the Special Criminal Court 'trial' of the Murrays was a sham.

The acting editor of Hibernia at that time was Brian Trench, leading member of the Socialist Workers' Movement. His organisation proclaims to be a revolutionary markist group and to be committed to building a party whose aim is the smashing of the institutions of the Irish Bourgeois state, among which they correctly include the courts and judiciary.

Furthermore, Trench's group has consistently been involved in the propaganda and activities on the Murrays. It has also called for the abolition of the Special Criminal Court, an institution responsible for jailing hundreds on the say-so of a police chief.

Therefore, it would seem a matter of elementary principle that Trench would seize the opportunity of his appearance before the High Court to argue his political opposition to the S.C.C., as well as the whole judicial, state and economic system in which it flourishes, and call for trade union opposition in support of the Murrays and republicans. After all, what SWM demand of others to do should be automatic for them as leaders.

Alas, Trench decided to forget his politics and his principles. Not only that, but he cravenly and in a cowardly way mimicked the judges and their flunkeys by repeating the whole load of ideological poison about the neutrality of the courts of the ruling class. Here is part of his affidavit; "He did not consider they (the letters) could be construed as bringing the court into contempt nor as being prejudicial to the administration of prejudicial to the administration of could be construed as bringing the court into contempt nor as being prejudicial to the administration of justice. If he had realised that they were capable of such interpretations he would not have published them. If the court should hold that the publication of the letters did scandalise the court and interfere with the course of justice, he wished to offer a full apology and to express his deep regret." (Our emphases.)

Such is the principled opposition of a 'marxist' before a bourgeois court suppressing free speech in the press on an issue on which hundreds of anti-imperialists have been jailed and tortured. We believe Trench's actions are a disgusting and flagrant betrayal of not only his our small group but of marxists in general.

In Ireland where the working class North and South so desperate—ly need a revolutionary socialist leadership armed with a programme tried and tested in the furnace of class struggle, republicans alone have displayed heroism and self-sacrifice in pursuit of their goals.

WHAT DOES SWM SAY?

As we have argued both within and outside the SWM, Trench and the SWM represent a centrist sect, veering with the wind of every struggle, but leading none. It is clear from this latest and most cowardly act of opportunism that the SWM is moving significantly rightwards as the problems facing the class mount.

We call upon the SWM members to answer the following questions.

- 1. Was the issue of Trench's 'appearance' before the court debated before he submitted his affidavit?
- 2. Do the SWM members believe that revolutionary socialists can individually pick and choose when they will oppose the system's institutions? If so, what is the point of calling oneself a revolutionary socialist and belonging to a group?
- 3. How does SWM explain Trench's actions to its supporters whom it regularly calls upon to support those who do resist the courts.

So far, SWM has printed nothing in its paper concerning this issue, a widely publicised issue which did not escape the main RTE news bulletins. Why the silence?

THE FIGHT FOR POLITICAL STATUS - THE LIMITS OF OPPORTUNISM 2.

Over a year ago, after several months' warning, the British ended special category status for republicans arrested and charged after April 1st 1976. This move was correctly seen by socialists as a major political step to ideologically further erode the remaining links between the republican movement and the anti-unionist population, thus weakening the ability of the IRA to continue its campaign.

The issue thus raised in the sharpest possible way the very basis, meaning and relevance of the whole conflict in the last seven years. By their readiness to attack such a cardinal principle, the authorities demonstrated a determination and a confidence born of the knowledge that considerable apathy and demoralisation (- among other things the Assembly had collapsed -) had sapped the will of thousands of anti-unionists to continue a struggle which promised no solution on the basis on which it was being waged by the Provos. 9917 immo

For socialists and republicans, therefore, the issue represented the most critical development in the fight so far. If the British could successfully 'criminalise' their enemy' in what everyone knew to be a war between one section of the Irish people and British Imperialism and loyalism then it would be the clearest sign that, whatever pockets of resistance remained the war had moved politically in favour of imperialism and its allies North and South. For socialists, clearly, the question of fighting this development posed the need for the formulation of a clear and correct strategy which if agreed upon had to be fought for and implemented whatever the opposition.

THE UNITED FRONT

The slogan for an anti-imperialist united front has appeared frequently in the programmes of the revolution-ary left in the last few years. The IWG believes that the slogan is the most crucial part of revolutionary practice in the present situation.

However, we believe that the failure of the left to situate the slogan in the context of an overall revolution—ary perspective has led to the slogan becoming nothing more than an organ—isational alternative to republican—ism. That perspective must be one of:

- a. drawing the anti-unionist working class as a class to the forefront of the struggle in the North;
- b. the development of an anti-unionist armed front of workers, socialists and republicans;
- c. mobilisation for a general strike;
- d. the emergence of soviets;
- e. the demand for a Workers' Government.

The united front is a tactic adopted by revolutionary marxists when i. objectively the most pressing needs of the masses can only be defended by united mass action, and ii. subjectively the masses remain under the leadership, programmes, organisation and methods of forces which are not revolutionary socialist and are obstacles to both the defence of immediate interests and to the long-term needs and development of the struggle for a workers state.

Therefore, the united front is a method by which both aims - uniting the masses on the most important issues facing them, and exposing the false solutions of non-marxists can be achieved under the leadership of revolutionary marxists and their programmes. While in the short term the united front focusses on the most immediate needs, it is at the same time the basis for deepening and widening the struggle into an offensive. Thus all local, partial immediate issues must be located within a perspective which ultimately sees the emergence of an armed front headed by the anti-unionist working class as the only means of defending the gains of the struggle. In such a situation, one basically of dual power, the method of the U.F. remains the same - mobilising the broad mass . offered a clear opening to put into of the Irish people on the most militant and revolutionary demands. Thus the demand for the general strike and and the leading role of soviets (workers councils) and for a workers government cannot in principle be separated from a perspective of building a mass united front against imperialism - nor can the creation of the revolutionary party and its programme.

p.13

When the slogan for the U.F. is seen from this political perspective it is easily understood why the right of each organisation to argue its own political line is a principle of united front activity. Without this right there can be no criticism, debate or argument before and within the masses on past, present and future activity. When the masses do not test the programmes of the participating organisations against their experiences the front remains in effect the vehicle for the non-marxist forces to carry out joint activity on their terms. betimm ed

Thus in the present situation where thousands are demoralised, a large extent because of the politics and military tactics of the Provisionals, such fronts are a cover for their strategy and in no way contribute to the breaking down of the apathy and demoralisation. For left groups to participate in such fronts amounts to disgraceful opportunism.

Furthermore, without the freedom to criticise and debate, the only means whereby the revolutionary left can relate to the most politically conscious men and women is lost. In such circumstances no class-conscious vanguard from within the class can be located and developed as the natural leaders of their class. Without the means to identify this stratum in the class marxist groups remain passive commentators in theory and active opportunists in practice. If as organisations they gain at all it can only be on lines which capitulate to republicanism. Ultimately, as the IRSP split showed, this has no future.

POLITICAL STATUS -s self vd be THE RECORD OF THE LEFT

When the British Government announced their intention to end political status the revolutionary left were practice their calls for the united front. Yet, between the announcement by the British and the first prisoner sentenced, a period of almost seven months, the left did nothing. Why? Simply because the Provisionals preferred to wait, as usual, for the prisoners themselves to give a lead, hoping, no doubt, that mass spontaneous activity by anti-unionists such as happened over internment would enable them to avoid any kind of unity with other political groups, particularly marxist.

If the left had quickly agreed on a simple programme initially around the issue of status, but in principle spelling out the united front structure and the reason for it, inviting all and anyone to join, a small but determined campaign of meetings, leaflets and marches could have focussed the attention of sections of anti-unionists towards the left and their independent strategy.

By preferring to wait for the Provos the left inevitably found themselves wrapped up in one of the innumerable support organisations demanded by the politics of the Provisionals - in this case the Relatives Action Committees. The attempt by the left to turn this into a united front was always doomed. After the 1976 November demo which did see the revolutionary left on the platform in relative strength, the central committee of the R.A.C.s, obviously under pressure from the Provisionals who did not order their branches to support the march, had a number of resolutions passed which effectively killed the last chance of broadening the R.A.C.s politics and structure. Of those present from the left only an IWG comrade opposed these resolutions.

TOLIS CONDITIONS

What was necessary, then, was for the left to withdraw from the R.A.C.s unless a genuine U.F. structure was set up, stating clearly the reasons. that whilst fully determined to support all demos, meetings etc. of the R.A.C. it would be necessary for the left to criticise aspects of the wider struggle which hampered the development of a mass movement; that, furthermore, instances of murder, harrassment and torture by army and RUC all demonstrated the clear need to bring all protests under one form of political organisation which could link the ghettoes not only in Belfast but Derry etc.

After November the R.A.C., instead of building upon its very promising beginning, initiated a series of local stunts involving women relatives of the prisoners by themselves camping out clad, like the prisoners, only in blankets. In themselves such acts were brave attempts to focus publicity on the status campaign. However, without a wider political perspective they served more to undermine the campaign. Why?

l. Such acts are totally isolated by their very nature from possible acts of solidarity involving hundreds of anti-unionists. It is only through street meetings, demos, rallies etc. in which there is debate and argument on the best way forward and the necessary tactics that political consciousness can be developed on the need for a new perspective among anti-unionists.

2. Through the use of women relatives of the prisoners there is a calculated attempt to turn the political question into a moral and humanitarian question, evoking 'sympathy'. Not only does this encourage republican women in seeing their actions as 'non-political' support, as extractors of sympathy, it also reduces them as the most active to a politically passive role at a time when debate about perspective is crucial. So, vin the R.A.C. the women remain under the thumb of the Provisionals. This tendency is further strengthened by the use of relatives who understandably fear for the lives of their suffering loved ones and are less psychologically prepared to tolerate what they see as 'nit-picking' law on politics and polemics about unity face up to the responsalsacoup

The R.A.C.s since organised a large demonstration on March 6th. It is obvious that the Provisionals feel confident that any threat from the marxist left has been warded off:

the platforms remain consistently republican and rhetorical, even Nationalist, the left having accepted their role as cheerleaders for the Provisionals, still trying to win credibility.

A.I.F. COMMITTEE

Ultimately, realising what rubbish this was, a joint action committee to work for an Anti-Imperialist Front was formed in Belfast composed of the small left groups. The committee did not define its attitude to the R.A.C. which showed that it could mobilise thousands behind a Provo platform. To remain within the R.A.C. was to render the AIF committee a useless and empty exercise in toy bolshevism. To leave the R.A.C. raised the charge of sectarianism and the question of why so so long in it, to which the left can say nothing. Such is the price of opportunism. The committee was stillborn.

THE IR IS HIF RONT TANGE

The emergence of the I.P. in Derry summarises in a nutshell all of the above criticisms of the Irish left. It was originated by the right-wing Nationalist Party, long since left behind by the events of the last six years in order to steal a propaganda march on the SDLP in the wake of the 'political vacuum' of direct rule and the approaching local elections.

(In fact Mc Ateer's championing of the I.F. was publicly qualified by opposition to violence. During the election campaign he claimed to be unifying the resistance to repression by joining the I.F., and for his troubles he captured a seat in Derry for his son and the Nationalist Party.)

The Front was set up by the Nationalists, the Provisional Sinn Fein, the reconstituted rump of Derry IRSP and a number of pressure groups all more or less republican.

At no time has the Front attempted to go beyond the crippling limits of a Popular Front. While actually taking up correct demands it has resolutely prevented any socialist method of politics from being put forward. For this reason the IWG would not join it. In effect, the Front is a total capitulation to the worst form of Irish nationalism as can be seen from the rubbish printed in their bulletins. The Front's charter speaks of the need to unite "for the good of the nation". It talks of "our national saint" (on a St. Pat-rick's Day leaflet), "our Celtic traditions". It is not surprising that the Front sent a letter to the representative of Irish capitalism in Strasbourg, Costello, congratulating the Irish government on its case against Britain. Even the Irish Times revelations about Garda torture couldn't reveal to the Front how utterly opportunist and unprincipled they were.

p.15

It is not surprising, then, that a protest by workers from the Essex factory was persuaded to appeal to Bishop Daly to 'intervene' to help the prisoners in Castlereagh Barracks.

No socialist need raise hands in horror at this - all of it bears the standard mark of the Provisionals and Nationalists trying to appear as parliamentary and respectable as possible in politics. What is horrifying, however, is that all of these measures were in fact not only defended by the "trotsyists" of the IRSP but actively encouraged by them in the delusion that the credibility won will swell the ranks of their politically bankrupt organisation. Hence the fierce resistance to the suggestion by IWG thatmit shouldsool appeal to workers to join it as workers and trace union sts in order to give the Front the perspective of organising strikes. It was the IRSP marxists' who attached this perspective for fear of frightening off Mc Ateer or the Provos.

The Front has organised one very large demo (St. Patrick's Day) noited through largely appealing to the most backward green nationalism. The IRSP socialists, while capitulating absolutely to this in practice, groups all more or less republican.

betqmetts the Front attempted to go beyond the crippling limits of a Popular Front. While actually and ti abusaeb toerroo qu gaidst resolutely prevented any scoialist method of politics from being put forward. For this reason the IVG would not join it. In effect, the are permitted to console themselves with phantasies about 32-county constituent assemblies working out "what kind of state forces Ireland should have" (sic) and about workers militias (sic) as transitional to a sccialist police force (sic). On the political basis on which it is constructed the Irish Front, if it survives, can only mean the re-establishment of republicanism at a level ideologically. more primitive than ever. The consequence of this for revolutionary socialism and the destiny of the Irish working class will be disastrous.

MARXISM ON CREDIT Sylbodar With the capitulations of the Provos on political status both North and South and the dwindling possibility of any mass campaign, revolutionary socialists can have no room for comfort. Divided, small and weak, the left are very much on the sidelines, invited to join 'on condit-ions'. So far the left has demonstrated that it is always prepared to accept whatever conditions are imposed, persuading themselves that this is the way to buy 'credibility'. In essence this is marxism on credit. "Some day, one day" the argument goes, "will be more suitable for applying our principles but not an question, evoking 'sympathy."won

This is the hallmark of opportunism and it accounts for the irrelevance of the left in the last six years. More fundamentally, it raises the whole question of programme and strategy, the inability of the revolutionary marxists to put decis forward a genuine international working class programme which is truly independent of all petty bas bourgeois republicanism and its s and solutions. to sevil al-

The need to begin to seriously work out this programme, while in no way withdrawing into pure and is the 'theory' is critical. The left itilica must face up to the responsibility of genuinely understanding and learning the lessons of its past failures. Regroupment and fusion is a strategic necessity but only as the outcome of serious and frank discussion.

republic 16 of the torical, even Nationalist, the left having accepted

kept the JHoT graduated Stand UNINAMO Destinated when when colition operations of workers in dispute 1t involved politics and propaganda,

Workers in Ireland are among the most extensively organised in trade unions in the capitalist world. Yet Irish workers are far more politically abckward than say, in Italy, where trade unions organise a much smaller section of the class. The task of leading Irish workers forward to the creation of workers' councils and a Workers' State must in large measure be worked out in the trade union movement, but it would be wrong to assume that revolutionaries can confine themselves to "official" structures.

The trade unions, viewed as a part of the broad labour movement (which includes house-bound working class women), are the crucial arena in which we must fight for revolutionary politics, but the task is immense and demands not only energy but a degree of clarity and principle of which there is little evidence on the far left, not to speak of the hopelessly compromised stalinists of the "Communist" Party and the petty-bourgeois "Workers' Party" of Sinn Fein. In a nutshell, day-to-day tactics must always be subordinated to a programmatic strategy for workers' power!

Further articles in CLASS STRUGGLE will examine in depth the problems of trade union bureaucracy, reformism in the labour movement and the task of building a rank and file movement. The present article is a critical evaluation of recent experiences and squandered opportunities.

Our attacks on the opportunism and confusion of other socialist groups have only one purpose: to expose what we believe are the roots of the total irrelevance of the "revolutionary" left as a political force. We expect replies from them. Only through debate can an effective programme be worked out which can be the basis of regroupment on the left.

THE DUBLIN SHOP STEWARDS AND RANK AND FILE COMMITTEE

The DSSC was the longest-running attempt to build a rank and file movement in the unions. We make it the focus of this review, but first we should outline its history.

In Dublin in 1973 three hundred shop stewards pledged opposition to the National Wage Agreement proposals for 1974, contributing through their action to the re-negotiation of better terms by Congress. The early DSSC involved not merely members of the League for a Workers Republic (LWR), the Movement for a Socialist Republic (then RMG) and the Socialist Workers Movement, but also many militarts from the "Communist" Party of Ireland. Most of those involved shared the view that it should be built upon as a basis for a rank and file movement against the sellout of living standards represented by National Wage Agreements (NWAs).

When the CP pulled its members and followers out of the DSSC (without internal debate, we learn later from the IMS breakaway group) it was in reality recoiling from its first close-up exposure to rival trotsky-ist groups. It claimed that, as a single-issue campaign, it should not perpetuate itself. But, when one wage agreement followed another the CP maintained a sectarian boy-cott of the DSSC even though the DSSC continued till 1976 as the only organised inter-union campaign.

What bothered the CP was that their recruitment opportunism was restricted by working with other groups and they would rather not mobilise workers at all if it meant that smaller groups might have a chance to argue for their views. "We pulled our members out because it was taken over by bloody trotskyites" - thus spoke a leading member of the CP two yeras later. Sinn Fein, for its part, followed the CP line.

Unfortunately, too many of the "trotskyites" came to take the same view when, not having gained much in three years, they came to believe that it was politics itself that kept the DSSC from growing, rather than wrong politics, opportunist politics and political confusion.

p.17

SMALL GAINS

The DSSC continued through 1974 with a much reduced campaign against new NWA terms. It had, however, developed a small-circulation paper of its own, a wide network of contacts and even a feeble national committee linking it with a few tiny initiatives in the provinces aimed at setting up local rank-and-file committees. A programme of rank and file demands had been agreed, representing a considerable gain. Agreement went deeper, however, and was more detailed than the list of its demands included here from issue no. 5 of the Trade Unionist. For example, it issued leaflets on equal pay which included the demand for availability of contraceptives and women's right to control their own fertility.

" DEMANDS OF THE DSSC

- "A return to free collective bargaining.
- "Automatic wage increases to compensate for increases in the cost of living, based on a cost of living index drawn up by the Trade Union movement.
- "Full equality for women workers.
- "Opposition to redundancies five days work or five days pay.
- "End the two-tier picketing system.
- "Withdrawal of the ICTU from the Employer-Labour Conference.
- "For greater democracy in the unions.
- "For joint inter-union rank and file committees at work and throughout industry.
- "No restrictions on the right to strike.
- "Opposition to productivity deals which result in a loss of jobs.
- "Support for trade unionists in dispute."

While the DSSC quickly won the enmity of trade union leaders (and the left groups suffered a loss of nerve in this respect), the DSSC also became a focus for several groups of workers in disput. It involved itself in larger disputes through solidarity action and propaganda, on some occasions with the approval of officials of smaller unions. There was scope for increased work of this kind, but attendances in 1975 fell off, and by 1976 when solidarity work was resumed, the DSSC's days were numbered. Its final abolition after the 1976 "Campaign Against Wage Restraint" can only be explained in terms of the politics of SWM and MSR, the only two of the original groups remaining in it. But more of that below.

1976 CAMPAIGN

The revival at the end of 1975 ran into a severe internal crisis in the new year in which SWM led a walk-out of ten of the thirty in attendance. This was an attempt to restrict membership and retrieve a "representative" appearance, resulting in a new set of rules which were just as quickly thrown aside.

SWM, MSR and followers steered the DSSC into liquidation in the wage-restraint campaign, a single-issue campaign against proposed terms for the 1976 NWA. They rejected the idea that the DSSC should continue to have its own meetings or that, alternatively, the campaign should be broadened to take up the programme of the DSSC.

This sharp turn meant abandoning solidarity work, publications and meetings of the DSSC as such. It enabled the two left groups to shelve the debate on how to fight the related aspects of the crisis and agitate for a rank and file movement through the network of DSSC contacts.

Some took the view, correctly, that the CP's followers ought to be involved in the campaign, but they opportunistically used this as an argument for raising only the single slogan of opposition to the NWA - as if that would make the least difference to the CP.

ILLAUNCHING PLATFORM ID thairtuo enT

In March 1976 a small DSSC meeting almost exclusively of socialists, accepted a programme of demands against the NWA, for full compensation for inflation, against redundancies and unemployment and for equal pay. This was to be submitted to a conference which took place with 90 militants on 27 March. The resulting resolution adopted is appended to this article.

It emerged, however, that the SWM and MSR rejected this programme as the basis of the proposed campaign. But they did not say so before the campaign launching conference, nor did they, as effective joint organisers with a few individuals, bother to sit down and discuss how best to steer the conference. As a result, the remarkable attendance of 90 militants was wasted in the formal passage of a resolution that was tacitly rejected by a significant section of the organisers who were, as part of the DSSC, proposing it.

Arguments against this programme were put from the floor as motions at a but by thengit was too late tool you s hammer out a perspective that would turn the enthusiasm of the meeting and into material gains. Furthermore, was a SWM and MSR subsequently claimed 80-08 that the resolution adopted at the conference had no status and rejected any attempt to publicise the demands which posed an alternative to the frago Wage Agreement. The simple rejection of of the NWA was all they would allow now to be published along with cheerleading the sectional wage claims beef of the craft unions on union abart ent

The support of the SWM and MSR and for the resulting Campaign Against was wage Restraint, as groups, was pathetic, despite the dedication of a few of their members. On unemployment both groups rejected the proposal to issue a leaflet from the Campaign to the Dublin Trades Council demonstration against unemployment. Instead both groups produced their own sheets to add to the six others on offer.

MSR rejects: the call for "free answer collective bargaining (in common with the B&ICO!) and believed that an fine MWZ to solding falled talks.

equal pay should not be raised in the fight against the Wage Agreement.

SWM propaganda advocated once-off lump-sum claims in imitation of the craft unions behind whom they trailed. The building workers' claim from that period, though conceded in part only, has yet to be paid and has had no effect in preventing the acceptance of two subsequent wage agreements.

IF NO WAGE AGREEMENT THEN WHAT?

In July 1976 when the first set of NWA proposals had been defeated despite the generally undemocratic nature of union ballots, no alternative had been proposed from any quarter. The result was that and of all without even the semblance of a mandate from the union movement the Congress negotiators (including the CP leader of ASTMS which was opposed to NWAs) went back to no rehau the Employer-Labour Conference and re-negotiated an interimal bellis agreement and subsequently a longer-term wage agreement which add up to worse than the rejected terms, especially for women and the lower-paid daiting bas dair and

Using the names of individual militants, mostly their own members or supporters, the SWM succeeded in convening a final meeting of the Campaign committee without using the name of the Campaign. It was held on July 19 and consisted of about 20 of those active in the sed Clampaign Against Wage Restraint on 10 This ad-hoc meeting presumed to sit noo abolish the DSSC which had not w your met under that name since March. of BJ It was not, however, a notified remov meeting of those who were members of the DSSC under the new rules so bitterly fought for by these self-appointed convenors. transcripe tail

SWM - MSR BOSUS COMMITTEE

The July meeting elected a committee of five who were not to be subject to any regular general meetings. This committee undertook to initiate action and leaflets against any further wage agreements.

MSR and SWM and supporters comprised the committee, involving their leading members directly.

And what did this committee do?

Vieve ni beosi anoita p. 29 t newans

This committee did nothing, published nothing, called no meetings, and yet two Wage Agreements were foisted on us since then!

The absence of the DSSC over the past year as a focus for militants, has clearly revealed that it continued to have an indispensable role. Some of the problem may have stemmed from misconceptions about the DSSC. It was not a "rank and file movement" but it was the only organised centre from which any attempt was being made to build such a movement. The accusation hurled at it by SWM and MSR that it was pretentious and trass really didn't exist al all was emuse nothing but a cover for withdrawing into their own opportunist - and in ways sectarian - strategies. Only die 9 months previously the SWM had become decided to take in hand the rebuilding of the DSSC, but when it had salt undergone a modest revival somewhat independently of themselves they killed it stone dead . et stone men bas

SVM's "WORLER"
SOME OF THE POLITICAL ISSUES

We argue that the central need of the Irish and British bosses in the present period of crises is to drive down workers' living standards, to weaken shop floor organisations, to demoralise and divide the unions and the class in order to make possible a return to higher profit rates.

Their weapons have been one form of incomes policy or another - Social contract or Wage Agreements (increasingly with empty promises by the State to create jobs). In both cases workers have bought the arguments despite the fact that thousands have known instinctively that they are pro-capitalist, class-collaboration-ist agreements.

The trade union leadership both North and South have been able to sell their treacherous deals because the political questions thrown up by the combined effects of huge unemployment, large-scale factory closures, high inflation and the presence of Labour parties in governments have ideologically confused many good militants. No longer can simple reliance upon sectional militancy answer the questions faced in every

The outright dismissal of the small but significant gains represented by the DSSC and its rank and file programme was a retreat into private initiatives in the unions as direct extensions of the left groups themselves. We need not remind SWM and MSR of subsequent strikes when they needed that organised network of support but found it could not be conjured up overnight to have any effect on, for example, the cinema occupations. None of the faith in "work around the Trades Council" was rewarded.

The renewed attempts to build a movement within the ITGWU is in its politics entirely consistent with the opportunism of these groups. Its attempt to seem politically anonymous has resulted in a reformist and even syndicalist line in "New Liberty", even in those articles written by "revolutionary Socialists" in it, and by extension, in the promotion of "New Liberty" by the SWM's "WORAGR" struggle by workers. The basis for a way forward can only be provided by clear political alternatives to the solutions of government, Labour Party, trade union leaders and so-called trade union lefts, alternatives which must be weapons for the rank and file. The union leadership has been able to collaborate openly with government and bosses because no organised movement of workers existed to fight the sellouts independently of the official outs independently of the official the trade union movement itself.

This floes not mean that there have not been workers opposed to the bureaucrats. What has been absent is the combination of a fighting programme of demands and the political leadership committed to winning to it the best militants in factory shop and industry. In several ways the DSSC was a serious attempt to begin such a movement.

The failure of that movement to grow and develop rank and file organs around a programme in unions, across unions and in localities is in part explained by the confused and opportunist politics of SWM and

p.20

MSR, especially in the period after the withdrawal of the CP and Official Sinn Fein and the disappearance of the LWR.

In that period, having expelled those who later initiated the IWG, and SWM's centrism emerged in full. Recruitment opportunism, the abandonment of its own formal political positions and an increasingly abstracted moralism in its paper, especially towards the trade union leaders, have been its hallmarks.

Formally, always committed to the building of a rank and file movement, SWM has never broken from the "rank-and-file-ism" of its mentors in the the Fritish IS group. Thus its under-standing of the bur aucracy as corrupt and based on material privileges leads it to ignore the reformist politics of the bureaucracy and its real basis in the acceptance of the wage contract system as the limiting framework of trade union "bargaining". It is this accomodation to life under capitalism and the resulting "professionalising" of wage-bargaining that create the bureaucracy, its need to control the union members a and its reformist politics. Ignoring the task of breaking workers from the grip of reformist ideas, SWMisss elevates mere militancy as the way forward and refuses to argue even for its own political perspectives. It actually believes that militancy is in itself a break with reformism. Rather than fight for a programme which will break workers from reformist leadership it rejects reformist political groups as irrelevant. The completion of this sectarianism is to see the building of a rank-andfile movement as simply a back-yard for recruitment, a department of the party itself nemevem elil bas dasa s

While SWM has shifted its attention from the DSSC to the Trades Council and the building of a rank and file grouping in the ITGWJ its political orientation has not changed at all. When abolishing the DSSC, SWM spokesmen held out the prospect of building a city-wide rank and file movement after groups had been set up within unions. They have however, traded the class-wide political perspective of a rank and file movement for the creation of ginger groups

w thin the unions. SWM's sleep-walki g from one crumbling hillock to a other augurs poorly for the delivery of their promises.

IF IT LOOKS LEFT - PUSH IT ...

The MSR, in advocating the abolition of the DSSC last July made a similar pledge of a second coming. They, too, would retire into the unions to consolidate support therein the parlance of the USFI -"class struggle tendencies".

This particular perspective on the rank and file is a perfect companion to MSR's new-found conservatism in trade union matters evident in a weakening towards the bureaucracy and the refusal to call for free collective bargaing in effect defending centralised bargaining despite its deeply bureaucratic and undemocratic nature in the present period. Not the least among their blunders, nor indeed does it appear to be a mere passing fad, is their adaptatation to the bureaucracy's call for a 'national economic plan'.

On the wrong assumption that workers were calling for an economic plan they adopted the form of the demand and propagandised to give it a 'socialist' content.

This they have been doing without in any way connecting the slogan to the political perspective of a workers' government. We quote:

MSR leaflet, May '76: "The trade unions must ... formulate an Economic Plan which bases itself on social needs, in order to get the economy going".

And Feb. 1977. "The only way in which unemployment can be eliminated is through a national economic plan based on the use of our natural resources, nationalisation of key industries and the parasitic financial sector, legislation giving workers control over production, protection for women..."

-MSR trade union newsheet no.6.

Such a plan might at a certain juncture be posed as part of a united front programme for a Workers! Government (though hardly "to get the economy going"!), but only as the capstone to a whole programme containing in the rank and file movement. As posed by MSR it is not a fighting programme. Instead it bolsters illusions in reformism when even reformists are publicly in despair; it consigns political answers to the realm of abstraction and leaves the class unarred.

p.21

It is only in this perspective on MSR that one can locate or make sense of their attitude to the rank and file. Because they lack the perspective of a transitional programme for now capable of linking the dayto-day fights for reforms and for workers' control to the transitional goal of a Workers Government, MSR must fall into consolidating every leftish stir that has the appearance of class struggle. In common with opportunists in general, political clarity is the first victim of their desire to have about them a broad current that is flowing vaguely in the right direction, a current that they will locate by hook or by crook no matter how far under they have to sink. Even in this period of capitalist crisis revolutionaries must swin against the prevailing tide in the class which is towards confusion division and defeat, despite heroic sectional militancy.

A QUESTION OF PROGRAMME

The basis of a rank and file movement cannot simply be the unity of workers on the basis of simply coordinating their frustrations in the workers' own terms. A clear programme must be fought for in any section of the rank and file where socialists are active. At least a substantial part of such a programme must be an absolute pre-condition of any rankand file organisation started by socialists.

Where the focus is unemployment socialists have no role as socialists if they do not agitate for clear demands on overtime, public works, nationalisations, etc.; where redundancy is the issue socialists must fight for unconditional physical resistance around clear demands - work or full pay, open the books, nationalisation under workers' control. When wages are the issue, a clear and unifying demand must be raised which deals with inflation. In general, socialists must bring their programme of clear, class-wide, concrete demands into every struggle and seek to build structures that will give permanent form to advances by workers.

When building a political current in the unions it is not enough to try to connect up everyone who makes left noises. Activity must be focussed around precise demands for union democracy, for organisation independently of the union officials as the only way to defend, let alone advance the unions. Every union platform must be used, but "unofficial" meetings and bulletins are indispensable tools. We cannot ever accept confinement to the official structures, nor should we tolerate the delusion that 'rejeuvenating' union branches is enough.

"WE CAN'T APPROACH WORKERS FROM THE OUTSIDE..."

This wretched token of trade union conservatism and cowardice is also a rejection of socialism - which does not grow on assembly lines. The idea was used as an argument against the continuation of the DSSC. Specifically, it was raised to discourage the DSSC from taking any action about the mass redundancies in Gouldings. Probably because they felt more at home in the Dublin Trades Council, some erstwhile pillars of the DSSC claimed we could not go along from the outside to workers such as in Gouldings. So when these were sold out by the unions, there was no-one to offer a class perspective of solidarity, no-one to draw the lessons of the need for a rank and file movement which refuses to recognise the factory fence and the petty boundaries of union officials. When a handful of men stayed inside for the best part of a year and repeatedly found themselves in court, who was there in the Trades Council to fight alongside them? Id ond

EVERY INITIATIVE

The building of a rank and file movement must be seen as a class-wide task involving every initiative including local committees cutting a across factories, including every agitational grouping of the labour movement - price watch committees of housewives, womens rights groups, anti-repression committees, alliances against public spending cuts, and so on. Such occurrences are neither visionary nor unconnected. When the Kesh was burned, Belfast workers protesting at internment wrote to the DSSC for solidarity - and were refused! - by revolutionaries!!

elit bas FIGHTING THE CRISIS

amrol eldizaco The unity of the working class in the teeth of the present capitalist offensive was central to our arguments in the DSSC for an agitational alternative to Wage Agreements. As an answer to inflation we advanced the demand for inflation-proof wages, i.e. automatic increases to be won -by rank and file action. We rejected percentage increases in favour of a common minimum lump sum for all, to compensate in full for price rises, with no restriction on the right to fight for more where any section of the class can wrest it. The actual form of the demand suggested was roat least il for every 1% rise in athe official Price Index . This sum is necessary to compensate for growing deductions, the bias in the price index and the need to raise the earnings of the lower paid. As an actual amount of money it is entirely up to the rank and file to decide it in struggle, but the unifying nature of the demand makes it necessary for those suggesting it is to put forward a considered figure to give the demand a concrete form.

It is true that this demand could become a bargaining counter between bureaucrats and employers until it emerged beaten down to a number of pence for each percent or to a larger amount for each rise over a sizeable threshold. This fate can be suffered by many necessary demands when lifted out of their context as part of a programme. But it was precisely our point of view that called for a rank-and-file programme of linked demands to be taken up. It was our perspective alone that argued that every campaign should be conducted with the aim of building a movement to resist the crisis in all its aspects. onferen

By rejecting this view, MSR and SWM turned the Campaign Against Wage Restraint into a single-issue flash-in-the-pan. Indeed, by refusing to pose any alternative to the Agreement in terms of a rank and file movement, the Campaign played into the hands of left bureaucrats whose image benefited by joining in opposition to NWAs but who were relieved at not having to face the prospect of rank and file militancy.

"INEVITABLE PROCESS"? O JACK

MSR's justification for a singleissue campaign ties in with their implied belief that there is, beneath all, an inevitable revolutionary process, and that every progressive movement by workers represents a permanent gain even if it leaves no obvious trace. We do not share that pious hope. With it comes the policy of simply consolidating every movement on its own 'spentaneous' terms.

They wrote, with regard to workers fighting specific or local attacks: "by organising on this single issue the reformist illusions that workers have will begin to dissolve". No militant seriously expects, however, that this can be said with regard to the class on the cuestion of a single-issue campaign against wage restraint in the context where there is not even a minority rank and file movement.

Merely declaiming wage restraint implies seeing workers as devoid of ideas about the crisis in general and as immune to the propaganda and divisive tactics of the capitalists and their fire-brigade men in the unions. In speaking to the class or a cross-section of it, we cannot be effective by publicly ignoring the connections between the different aspects of the crisis.

Workers voted for the NWA because they believed that their wage "rises" had caused inflation, believed that the strong could only gain at the expense of the weak and believed that larger wage rises p.23 would cause more unemployment. It was not enough to simply point out how severe the real wage cuts were which the NWA would cause ... non yasnoisiv

Much more could be said, but the end result was the total abandonment of the DSSC and its rudimentary programme for building a rank and file movement.

It remains to be seen whether the latest initiative, uncritically backed by SWM, the ITG rank and file group, can become a genuine workers! group. In such an eventuality we would argue for our politics in any relations with it. At present, however, it appears to be little more than a centrist front - neither a movement of rank-and-file workers nor a political initiative to win support for a rank and file revolutionary programme. The left has put on its cloth cap again and gone to the class empty-handed. If the movement grows on the reformist and inadequate basis evident in its first two pamphlets then it will actually be an obstacle to the sare centrists when they decide the time is ripe to reveal whatever is left of their organisations' programmes. fighting specific or local actacks.

We believe there is the material possibility and urgent need for an inter-union joint action committee capable of retrieving the gains of the DSSC and becoming the focus in Dublin, and even nationally, for beginning the propaganda and agitation within unions and localities for a class-wide rank and file movement in all the possible forms mentioned earlier. The wing only

Our participation, however, in such a development can never be conditional on our hiding the most relevant aspects of our politics.

A united-front type approach by the left groups is now too much to expect if our analysis of the degeneration into opportunism is correct. But the issues must be openly debated. That is an obligation in principle for socialists. In no other way can a gegroupment of revolutionary elements be achieved, for in the absence of the joint working out of a programme for the period "left unity" is spurious. is necessary to concense to growing deducations, the bies in the price esunings of the lower veid. As an scuel amount of roney it is entire-

"by organism this sigle issue the r XIQUESSA 1110 the r in structio, but the unifying Resolution adopted by the Conference Against the Pay Pause, Wynn's, 27/3/76 NO WAGE AGREEMENT

This conference of rank and file trade unionists commits itself to organising resistance to any further National Wage Agreements which restrict the rights of individual unions to represent their members, and to fight for a full return to free collective bargaining.

and as immune to the po-FULL COMPENSATION FOR INFLATION

This conference commits itself to fight in the trade union movement for at least £1 for every 1% rise in the Consumer Price Index (including price increases due to taxation) with no restriction on the right to fight for bigger increases and to put lump sum claims as often as workers need. bevilled and affait because bed at the expense of the

RESIST ALL REDUNDANCIES

FIGHT UNEMPLOYMENT

This conference commits itself to full support for all forms of organised resistance to redundancies; demands that company books be opened to inspection by workers;

abnom demands a 35-hour working week;

rejects all productivity deals.

This conference commits itself to fight in the trade union movement for a ban on overtime to create more jobs; for the removal of all recruitment bans; for an end to double jobbing. also and dily betombers ed EQUAL PAY fainer of inemevon a gail

This conference commits itself to fight for equal pay for men and women workers immediately and for a national minimum wage of £45.

PORTUGAL — WHAT ARE THE LESSONS?

"A revolutionary situation exists in Portugal, a situation of fragmentation of power - leading to powerlessness. It cannot continue for long, Either the crisis will be resolved by the working class or by the forces of reaction. Such situations are the supreme test of parties, programmes, policies. In the last resort, all the political tendencies in the working class movement are to be judged by their willingness and their ability to lead the working class forward to power in the time of crisis - or by their contribution to its defeat. Portugal is the touchstone for organisations claiming to be socialist or communist" - the words of I.S. leader T.Cliff, Sep. 1975, I.S. Special no. 81/82.

A silence has fallen over the revolutionary left in Ireland and Britain on the question of Portugal. Journals and papers like the British IS (now SWP) or SWM's, once loud with the doings of Portuguese workers, have little or nothing to say. Apparently the lessons for these centrists are only the lessons of success.

While in opposition if the SWM we argued that such an attitude betrays contempt for Irish workers and Portuguese workers. Critical analysis of the failures of programmes, strategy and tactics is an elementary and essential aspect of internationalism. In its absence practical assistance and solidarity is likely to be missing too.

This article does not intend to analyse the whole course of events in Portugal up until the present situation. That would require a much longer piece. Here we are concerned to highlight the importance of those crucial questions of programme, strategy and tactics that are at the heart of the method of revolutionary Marxists as opposed to the opportunism and sectarianism of centrist and reformist parties. We believe that clarification and debate on such questions is now central to a perspective of regroupment and fusion if the Irish Marxist left is to avoid further stagnation and irrel-

Up to 18 months ago Portugal seemed poised on the brink of socialist revolution. Discipline in the army had broken down to such an extent that it was no longer reliable as a weapon in the hands of the ruling class. Struggles for workers' control in the media had created a workers' daily paper, Republica, and similarly, at Radio Renascensa the workers had wrested control from the Church. Striking building workers trapped the Constituent Assembly in the Sao Benti palace until their demands were met, almost driving the seat of bourgeois rule out of Lisbon to the conservative north.

The events of November 25th 1975 and the retreat of the working class since then completely reversed this situation and shifted the balance of forces firmly in favour of the right wing. Such a fundamental change could not have resulted merely from a clever manoeuvre by the right in the armed forces, particularly at a time when they were so weak. Though the right undoubtedly were planning such manoeuvres, this does not in itself explain the magnitude of the defeat in November 1975.

The fundamental reasons lie in the crisis of leadership of the working class movement. By November 25th the class struggle had reached such a peak that there were only two alternatives - either the seizure of power or backwards into a period of defeat. We now know the outcome.

We believe that all is not lost in Portugal. The class still faces enormous battles in the coming period. The war is not yet over. In order that its heroic struggles shall not go down in total defeat we raise here the crucial questions on which hang the fate of the Portuguese revolution in our view.

of HUT and to equilar ap. 25.

A TAHW —

UNITED FRONT

The hold of the reformist parties (CP and Socialist Party) within the working class has strengthened in spite of the defeats. This was ave entirely predictable. Their power to confuse, obstruct and ultimately to destroy the independent mobilisation of the class for crucial defensive and offensive action has always necessitated the fight by revolutionary socialists for a workers' United Front against reaction.

Early in the struggle, the revolutionary left in Portugal formed the FUR (Revolutionary United Front). It was totally inadequate for its purpose. It did not, initially, include the CP, the largest and most influential party in the working class. It excluded altogether the SP. Furthermore, whereas a united front requires limited but precise slogans that attempt to win workers, soldiers and peasants organisations to them while permitting the clearest distinction between political tendencies within the front, the FUR 'programme' was long-winded and imprecise as a programme of a revolutionary movement. Even more importantly, the most essential and principled aspect of revolutionary strate y - complete and total independence from all bourgeois institutions as solutions to working class problems was violated. The FUR accepted the programme of the MFA, the army of the bourgeois state.

The United Front from below must involve all workers' parties influential in the working class. The exclusion of the CP and SP only strengthened the view among many workers that politics is essentially sectarian self-seeking.

The content of the U.F. programme is the real key to the tasks facing revolutionary marxists. Only if the demands and slogans reflect the feelings and most urgent needs of the class as a whole can the divisions sown by reformists and the confusion peddled by centrists be overcome in struggle. It was precisely the failure of the FUR to hammer out a clear programme of political answers to the most immediate economic, social and political questions of the day that contributed to advanced workers and soldiers falling for the lunatic propaganda of the centrist PRP/BR about 'insurrection now'.

PROGRAMME

The basic elements of a proletarian United Front : programme should extend to the following.

- 1. Workers' control of productionnationalisation without compensation of all remaining enterprises above a certain size; workers' inspection and veto of all management decisions.
- 2. Support of all workers and peasants in struggle over low wages and working conditions. A rising scale of wages tied to a workers' cost of living index, and work or full pay.
- Democratisation of trade unions; all officials to be subject to imperative mandates and instant recall, and to be paid the average wage of their members.
- 4. Immediate economic measures to solve the disruption of production by the Portuguese and international bourgeoisie:
- a. concentration of the banks into a central state bank under workers! control; and state control of foreign banks.
- b. nationalisation without compensation of all foreigh holdings.
- c. nationalisation of all large land holdings and control of the land to those who till it.
- d. modernisation of agriculture and mechanisation credit for smallholders.
- e. a scheme of economic reconstruction under the control of workers' committees with compulsory labour service for all those fit.
- 5. Armed militias of workers, soldiers and peasants. Withdrawal. from NATO and unconditional independance from all political and military alliances with Stalinist or bourgeois states. D. 26

- 6. Solidarity with workers in other countries; for international rank and file trade union links.
- 7. Support for Spanish workers in struggle. For a United Iberian Socialist. States.
- 8. For a revolutionary international of workers' parties on a revolutionary programme for the world crisis of capitalism.

UNITED FRONT FROM ABOVE TOWN HEREI

On the basis of the lave programme revolutionaries fight for a government of the workers - a Workers' Government. They do so in order to a. deal with the deep economic collapse of Portuguese capitalism and combat economic sabotage; and b. expose the social democratic (SP) and stalinist (CP) leaders' real positions on these questions to their supporters in the working class.

The tactic of the Workers' Government is to prepare and arm the class for taking state power in a situation where the masses are still under the leadership of reformist and centrist parties. The situation where a workers' government of revolutionaries, stalinists and social democrats was elected to govern through a constituent assembly on the basis of the above programme would provoke immediate and violent reaction by the domestic and international bourgeoisie. In that event only the most proletarian and democratic of institutions, the workers' councils, could be the basis of mobilising effectively the mass of workers and soldiers for the only complete resistance the smashing of state power and the establishment of a workers' state.

WORKERS COUNCILS

The perspective entailed in building the United Front is the creation of workers' councils. The Portuguese working class has shown immense creativity in the variety of fighting organisations it has built. Despite constant attempts by the whole spectrum of stalinism, from the PCP to the Maoist MLP, to bureaucratise them or subject them to their sectarian stranglehold they succeeded in setting up genuine organs of worker democracy - neighbourhood and worker committees of struggle.

The urgent task should have been to draw delegates from these bodies into local councils and ultimately into a national assembly. To develop workers' councils all sectarianism must be laid aside. All bona fide delegates from workplaces should be admitted. Any attempt to limit their members to 'revolutionary' workers or to exclude certain parties or to proclaim the councils to be above, outside or anti-party should be fought. To enable the members of such councils to assess the right leadership, the most correct strategy, there must be absolute freedom of expression and caucus for all parties. Under correct leadership the councils would be a powerful lever for achieving workers' power.

THE REVOLUTIONARY PARTY

Events in Portugal in the last year have proved at least one thing - that the programmes. strategies and tactics of the 'revolutionary' left have proved totally useless as a guide to action for the masses. Whether accomodating to the SP (as did the Partido Revolucionario Trabalhadores, PRT), or to the Armed Forces Movement (as with Liga Communista Internacionale) or flirting with charismatic bourgeois figures, and of like army commander Carvalho (as did the Partido Revolucionario do Proletariado, PRP/BR), the trotskyist left stand indicted above all in their failure to even attempt to win. All remained impotent before the gains of the Maoist UDP which is a sectarian stalinist grouping firmly wedded to stagism' · more at elstockanod

Only a movement with a clearly tested transitional programme can now take up the destiny of the Portuguese revolution. In order to develop this programme it would have to fight in the class:

a. to build, develop and centralise workers' organisations into effective centres of struggle and potential organs of power;

p.27

- b. to launch the fight for the united front, with every workers' party where possible. Within the U.F. and workers' councils revolutionaries would fight for the principal planks of their overall strategy: and astegeleb word of
- 1. a workers' answer to the capitaliste crisis; see Lengthen's ofni
- 2. the dissolution of the armed forces as part of the machine of the bourgeois state, to win soldiers to the side of the working class; 'revolutionary'
- 3. support and assistance to Spanish workers and African freedom fighters; ol ad bluoda yrrsq-itas
- the building of a revolutionary international on a Leninist basis.

Tabuu INTERNATIONALISM

The Portuguese revolution, itself owing an enormous debt to the heroic national liberation struggles against the Portuguese colonial occupation forces, exerts a profound influence on developments in Europe and beyond. For revolutionaries in v the rest of Europe Portugal is and vital issue. Already direct links between workers have been built. However, as we have earlier stated, the failure to seriously approach the question of analysis, ignoring the practical consequences of such an approach, has left many workers with the cynical view that revolutions never work. Such a view leads to demoralisation and to deepening false consciousness.

In Ireland, it was fundamental to argue for an independent analysis of Portugal before as large a section as possible of workers. The basis of this would include: noise that ogm

- a. universal lessons the role of imperialism and the native bourgeoisie in economic sabotage; the role of the USA and EEC, of the army and the state machine; the treachery of Social Democracy and stalinism; the dangers of centrism, e.g. the PRP/BR, and the vital need for a correct revolutionary strategy.
- b. debate with the left before as many workers as possible - serious discussion of political differences, including with Labour Party and CP followers.

c. insistence in every publication on the supreme importance of concrete strategy and tactics to counteract the belief that spontaneity is enouth.

Only a clear and scientific understanding of the successes and failures of the Portuguese class struggle is worth imparting to Irish workers. There can be no tolerating cheerleading the appearances of revolutionary surges and then irresponsibly pretending, when ground is lost, that nothing ever happened, that no review is necessary.

-0-0-0-0-0-0-0-0-0-0-0-0-0-

sabotage; and b. expose the social democratic (SF) and stallnist (UP) leaders real new tilons on these questions to their supporters in

The tactic of the Workers' Government is to prepare and arm the class for taking state power in a situation where the masses are still harder centrist parties. The situation where a workers' government of nevolutionaries, stalinists and assembly on the basis of the above and violent reaction by the domesti and international bourgeoisie, In that event only the most proletarian and democratic of institutions. the workers' councils, could be the mass of workers and soldiers for the only complete resistance .the smashing of state power and 'are entablishment of a workers'

WORKERS COUNCILS

The perspective entailed in building the United Front is the creation of workers' councils. The Portuguese working olass has shown immense creativity in the variety of fighting organisations it has built. Despite constant attempts by the whole spectrum of stalinism, from the PGP to the Maoist SUP, to burcaucratise them or subject them state.

MILITANT'S CHAUVINISM

On Feb 18, Ted Grant, guiding glimmer of the Militant Group, arrived in Derry from Britain as part of his tour of Ireland to warn socialists and anyone interested of the attack on Militant by the bourgeois press and the Labour right wing. Armed with the usual mass of statistics and supported by a coterie of local Militants, the maestro of blackboard socialism hectored and hammered us with the time-worn mechanistic notions of the Militant road to the 'socialist transformation of society', There were no surprises and the great swell of 'revolutionary' politics left us barely ankle deep in a tepid pool of stagnant reformism.

SIGNIFICANT BLUNDER

Devoid of any revolutionary marxist perspective on reformism or on the capitalist state, Militant is fated to the kind of politics which led to the disastrous chauvinism exhibited by Grant at the Derry meeting.

In reply to an indignant harangue by an IRSP comrade on Militant's refusal to support anti-imperialist movements in Ireland, Grant blurted out that the Provisionals were to blame for all the sectarian and economic ills of the North. No theory of imperialist exploitation and repression here! And even more unforgiveably for a socialist he stammered: "WHAT ARE OUR BOYS SUPPOSED TO DO WHEN THEY'RE BEING SHOT IN THE BACK". -This in reference to the Bloody Sunday massacre of innocent civilians by the armed thugs of British Imperialism!!

However untempered by disciplined political thinking may have been the attack by the IRSP comrade, Grant's flustered reply was unmistakeably clear. The politics of Militant left him a paralysed victim of the ugly ghoul of national chauvinism, horribly reminiscent of the events leading to the decline of the 2nd and 3rd Internationals when working class leaders shamefully succumbed to crass 'patriotism' and class collaboration.

As one Militant supporter at the Derry fiasco observed: "That blunder by Grant has effectively finished the Militant Group in Derry". Not quite true. One wonders what effective role they ever played in Derry.

BEVAN WITCH-HUNT

According to Grant, the attack on Militant in Britain was to serve as a warning to the left who in a time of deepening capitalist crises were being attacked and slandered by vicious press campaigns and rumblings from the right of Labour. It was. Grant assured us, because Militant stood firmly on its principles and offered constructive answers to workers faced with savage attacks that it was the centre of a concerted attack by bourgeois reaction. When asked by a local member of the IWG how the behaviour of Bevan in dropping all his politics and eschewing any connection with the Militant faction (- which as far as he was aware 'doesn't exist as a group) in accepting a bureaucratic position as Youth Officer in the L.P., how this was an example of clear-cut principled leadership for the class "comrade" Grant could only mumble that Mr. Bevan was correct to have acted so - "after all the Tribune Group accept the same limitation". So Militant model themselves on that clique of left reformists?

WE DEFEND MILITANT BUT ...

We will at all times defend this group and any other socialists from attacks by the capitalist press or right-wing reaction. However, we shall not spare them when we criticise their peddling of illusions in trade union bureaucracy, as in the Better Life For All campaign or during the Loyalist "strike". Especially we shall not cease to attack them for refusing to support the anti-imperialist movement of republican and socialist groups.

We unreservedly condemn any leader in any labour movement who raises the disgusting spectre of national chauvinism in defence of the political bankruptcy of a group which has nothing but ridiculous illusions to offer North or South to the working class.

MILITANT'S CHAUVINISM

On Feb 18, Ted Cuant, guiding glimmer of the Militant Group, arrived in . Perry from Britain as part of his tour of Ireland to warm socialists and anyone interested of the attack serg aloegraped ent yd fantilih no. s and the belour right wing. Armed with bns solitalists to same Laure end supported by a coterie of local Millitants, the massim of blackboard with the time-worn mechanistic noend of beer justified to endit 'teleca lo moitsmrolament feliatooa' There were no surprises and the great swell of 'revolutionary' politics left us barely ankle deep in a tepid

SIGHTFICANT, BLUMDER

Devoid of any revolutionary markist perspective on reformism or on the capitalist state, Militant is fated to the kind of politics which.
led to the disastrous chauvinism exhibited by Grant at the Derry meeting.

In reply to an indignant harangue by an IRSP comrade on Militant's refusal to support anti-imperialist movements in Ireland, Grant blurted out that the Provisionals were to blame for all the sectarian and economic lits of the morth, Mo theory of imperialist exploitation and repression here! And even more unforgiveably for a socialist he stammered:

"WELT ARE OUR BOYS SUPPOSED TO DO HER THE BACK".

"HEM THEY'RE BERING SHOT IN THE BACK".

Sunday massacre of innocent civilians by the armed thurs of British

However untempered by disciplined political thinking may have been the attack by the IRSP comrade, Grant's flustered reply was unmistakeably olear. The politics of Militant left him a paralysed victim of the ugly ghoul of national cheuvinism, horribly reminiscent of the events leading to the feeline of the Znd and ing to the feeline of the Znd and feaders shamefully succumbed to trass 'patriotism' and class collaberation.

As one Militant supporter at the Derry fiasco observed: "That blunder by drant has effectively finished the Militant Group in Derry". Not quite true. One wonders what allected ive role they ever played in the True.

BRVAN WITCH-RUNT

According to Grant, the attack on Militant in britain was to serve as swarning to the left who in a time of deepening capitalist orises were being attacked and slandered by vicious press campaigns and rumblings from the right of Labour. It was, Grant assured us, because Militant stood firmly on its prinotples and offered constructive answers to workers faced with savage attacks that it was the centre of a concerted attack by bourgeois reaction. When asked by and word DWI ent lo redpen isool a behaviour of bewen in dropping all his politics and escheving any connection with the Militant faction (- which as far as he was aware 'doesn't exist as a group' in accepting a bureaucratic position as Youth Officer in the L.F., how this was an example of clear-out principled leadership for the class "comrade" Grant could only mumble that Mr. Bevan was correct to have eardirf ont lis notts" - os betos Group scoept the same limitation". So Militant model themselves on that olique of left reformists?

WE DEFEND MILITARY BUT. . . .

We will at all times defend this group and any other socialists from attacks by the capitalist press or right-wing reaction. However, we shall not spare them when we outticise their peddling of illusions in trade union bureaucracy, as in the Better Life For All campaign or during the boysitst "strike". Especially we shall not cease to attack them for refusing to support the anti-inperialist novement of republican and socialist groups.

We unreservedly condemn any leader in any labour movement who raises the discusting spectre of national chauvinism in defence of the political bankrupley of a group which has nothing but ridiculous illusions to the working class.